

Everything New Orleans

Database touted as latest tool in NOPD reform

Published: Tuesday, April 05, 2011, 9:56 AM Updated: Tuesday, April 05, 2011, 10:19 AM

By Times-Picayune Staff

The New Orleans Police Department's Public Integrity Bureau is getting a new tool to investigate improper behavior in the department.

The Inspector General has purchased a new database system for the bureau.

Susan Hutson, the city's independent police monitor, says the database, which will be unveiled Tuesday at 10:30 a.m., will be an important tool for the bureau.

Last month, the U.S. Justice Department released a report highly critical of the department. Among problems cited in the report was a failure to adequately investigate and track allegations of discriminatory policing.

© 2011 NOLA.com. All rights reserved.